SAMUEL SULLIVAN COX.

AN EXTREMELY VARIED AND FAIRLY SUCCESSFUL CAREER.

He Was Only Incidentally a Humorist but Always a Practical and Hard Working Legislator-A Quarter of a Century in Congress-1857 to 1889.

Now that Congressman Samuel Sullivan Cox has passed to his eternal rest, the American public fully realizes the good work he did. He was a humorist, it is true; but he was far more. He was virtually the creator of the life saving service on the coasts, and secured the enactment of the desired laws by congress; he devised and systematized the best practicable system of taking the census; he drafted and had passed several laws of great value to New York city, and during the civil war he was conspicuous among the very few men who opposed the general policy of the administration, and vet was never for one moment misunderstood or accused of faltering in devotion to the Union and constitution. His own statement of his position in those exciting times has been accepted by men of all parties. It was given in his "Eight Years in Congress," in 1865, and ran

"I represented you truly when I warned and worked from 1856 to 1860 against the passionate zealetry of north and south, I supported every measure which was constitational to suppress the rebellion. At the same time I have fully challenged the conduct of the administration in the use of the means committed to it by a devoted people. Believing that a proper use of such means would bring peace and union, and believing in no peace as permanent unless it were wed-ded to the Union in love and contentment, I have omitted no opportunity to forward these objects. This I have done in spite of threats and violence. For doing it your confidence has not been diminished, but in-

It may be added that though many believe he erred in many of his votes, all concede his honesty and patriotism. He was, indeed, of patriotic ancestry on both sides. His paternal grandfather entered Washington's army as a captain and rose to the rank of brigadier general, and his father was one of the pioneer settlers and statesmen of Ohio, while his mother was of the Sullivan family of Revolutionary times. Of Irish descent, Samuel Sullivan Cox was born at Zanesville, O., Sept. 30, 1824. He graduated at Brown university in 1846, worked long and enruestly as editor and contributor to a local paper, spent a year in Peru as secretary of legation, traveled in Europe, wrote "The Buckeys Abroad," and did many other good things before reaching the age of 32, at which age, [Renewed laughter.] in 1856, he was elected to congress.

Three times re-elected, he served continuously eight years; then, having missed two sing: terms, he re-entered congress, this time from the Ninth district of New York. He had taken up his residence in the city in 1866. In 1870 he was re-elected; in 1873 he was beaten for congressman at The next large. election he came in again, and was re again till his years but little of a quarter of a century. Of his return to congress Hon. James G Blaine in his history says:

original and entertaining books."

Abroad," has often returned to piague the author. In its pages he expressed without Immature ideas on Catholicism, Ireland, foreign trade and many other subjects, on which, it is scarcely necessary to add, his opinion was changed by longer observation. Nevertheless these were his expressions in type, and they have many times been quoted, both in congress and the campaign press.

The work which Mr. Cox did in congress was of the most practical nature. He was always the friend of the letter carriers, and be not only secured them better pay, introduced a bill which gave them variations, but he worked hard and long to lessen their hours of labor, in which effort he was successful. His law for the inspection of foreign vessels has done much to lessen the dangers of the sea, and the bill be introduced for the protection of immorants but an end to many scan-

A number of resolutions about the protection and release of American citizens abroad, including the vindication of German, Irish and Hebrew citizenship and religious teleration, fill his honorable record. Mr. Cox tried | They had no children. twice to pass a bill for the protection of con-nectial travelers, which was both times de-feated in the seants. For many years he was regent of the Smithsonian institution. He moved to take the Taurana bill forfeiting lands given to the Pacific railroads from the table and passed it in the house after one day's debate. He made the only speech against the back pay bill and returned the money paid to him.

Mr. Cox served as a member of the committee of foreign nilairs, for which he was embendy qualified by his experience in diplomacy, his extensive travels in foreign lands and his close starty and research. His mind was retentive and vigorous. When in 1883 he was a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives it was asserted that no other man was better adapted for the witten than Mr. Cox, because of his perfect familiarity with the rules and practice of the house. As speaker pro tem, he proved himself an excellent purliamentarian, bearing uself with dignity and a measure of force little to be expected from so slight a form. Every Congressman regretted that Mr. Cox was to leave Washington for Constantinople. He had been so long in the house that they bould not bear the idea of parting with him. He was appointed in March, 1881, and soon after he took his departure from New York for the scene of his new labors in the East. The sultan gave him a most cordial recepflon, and it is certain that he made a most favorable impression upon the Turkish court. He cleared up many diplomatic tangles, and the relations of the United States and Turkey were never more friendly. At length Mr. Cox wearled of the Orient, resigned, same home and easily resumed his place in congress. "I yearned for the society of you attemen," he said in one of his speeches after his return, and the good natured langa which followed showed that the yearning was mutual. His greatest success was to come. Almost alons he extract bis party from an absurd position in regard to the admission of the new states, and won so many friends that his tour through Montana, Washington and the Dakotas was a continued evation.

From December, 1857, to March, 1859, save about six years, he was continuously in congress, and only Judge Kelley and Sam Randall, of Pennsylvania, outranked him in continuous service. His nickname of "Sunset Cox" may have been given in consequence of his initials, "S. S.," but its first application was soon after the publication in his paper. The Statesman, of Columbus, O., paper, The Statesman, of Columbus, O., May 19, 1853, of a sophomorical description of a sunset, beginning as follows: A GREAT OLD SUNSET.

What a stormful sunset was that of last night!
How glorious the storm, and how splendid the setting of the sun! We do not remamber ever to have seen the like on our round globe. The scene opened in the west, with a whole horizon full of a golden interpenetrating luster, which colored the follage and brightened every object in its own rich dyes. The colors grew deeper and richer, until the golden luster was transformed into a gtorm cloud, full of finest lightning, which leaped in dazzling sigzags all round and over the city. The wind arose with fury, the siender shrubs and giant trees made obelsance to its majesty. Some giant trees made obeliance to its majesty. Some even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots "turned up their whites" to see Zephyrus march by. As the rain came, and the pools formed, and the gutters hurried away, thunder roared grandly, and the fire bells caught the excitement and rung with hearty chorus. The south and east received the coplous showers, and the west all at one the copious showers, and the west all at once brightened up in a long, polished belt of azure, worthy of a Sicilian sky. Presently a cloud ap-peared in the azure belt, in the form of a castel-lated city. It became more vivid, revealing strange forms of pearless fanos and alabaster temples, and glories rare and grand in this mundane sphere. It reminds us of Wordsworth's splendid verse in his "Execution."

Was of a mighty city, boldly say

A wilderness of buildings, sinking far And self withdrawn into a wondrous depth, Far sinking into splendor without endi Mr. Cox's first speech in congress attracted much attention, and his address late in 1862, when he described a brother congressman as flying from the field of Bull Run hanging to the tail of a stampeded steer, "like Anchises borne from burning Troy on the shoulders of Æneas," made a nation laugh in spite of its sorrow. In this same speech he summed up the Missouri controversy of the time in such an admirable and humorous style that it was at once accepted as correct by the public. This was the speech in which he told how Fremont's greatness "was blasted by the consuming torrent of 'Blair's Rhetoric'"—that being the title of a popular school book of the time. One of his last speeches was on the fisheries and fish commission, in which he said:

Mr. Speaker, there never was an interest in this country so cared for by the government as this of fish. Our first efforts, at least in New England, began with fish. When our ancestors—I refor to New England, where I was educated—when our ancestors went to King James for a charter to go across the seas and colonize Massachusetts, the king asked the Puritans:

"What is your object? What do you intend?" Their answer was: "To worship God and catch fish:" [Laughter,] Then the king rejoined: "I give you the charter. Fore Gail: It is the apostles" own calling!"

Why, sir, even in the early churches of New England the early and pious Puritans used to

Ye monsters of the bubbling deep, Your Maker's name upraise; Up from the sands, ye codlings, peep, And wag your talls always.

[Laughter and applause.]
So that in early New England the cure and care of fish was concomitant with commerce, liberty and sanctity. In later times New England has obtained congressional enactments giving free salt for her flah, while the miserable man in Chleago cannot get free salt for his port, [Laughter.] Con-gress has always had a kindly word for the fishermen. For many decades it gave bounties at so much per cod. These fishermen have not become less tenacious of their rights since the bounty ceased. They are a power in numbers and influence. They number a million or more of men constantly engaged in their hardy and hazardous occupation. Their calling is associated at the present time with some curlous wriggling in diplo-macy. [Laughter.] But wherever they are, and macy. [Laughter.] But wherever they are, and wherever they adventure, they should becared for by the fostering arm of the government.

SAMUEL SULLIVAN COX talent for the stump, his ready wit, and above all his good finture and good sense, commended him to the New York Democrats. He has been a model of industry. In all the pressure of congressional life, to the duties of which he has given assiduous attention, be has devoted much assigned to the pressure of the land they are, and wherever they adventure, they should becared for by the fostering arm of the government.

The main object of this bill, sir, is not to assist the fishermen so much as the consumers of fish. It would send out the seed broadcast that food harvests may grow in all the waters of this land. I trust there will be nothing done here to impair the usefulness of this bureau. T trust, as this bill takes no money out of the treasury, that no further objection will be made to its passage; that the president may be able to salect a good. assiduous attention, he has devoted much time to literature and has published several practical man of science and energy, whether he practical man of science and energy, whether he be a Democrat or not, to occupy and honor the riginal and entertaining books." The Buckeye
The first of these books, "The Buckeye found some good, scientific Democrat in this chroad," has often returned to pisgue the author. In its pages he expressed without the sciences cannot be monopolized by the Re-reserve and with all the fervor of youth his publican party. There may be a Democrat discovered with the qualities of a good, scientific fisherman. The president will find him. The president himself is somewhat of an expert in int line. [Laughter.]

The last letter written by Mr. Cox referred to an engagement to lecture on the Yellowstone country before the Steckler association of New York city; it was to Julius Harburg-er, president of the association, and ran thus:

New York, Sept. 6, 1889.

Dean Friends—After your work is done to-night come around to my house and see me. I am down sick with a malarial fever, and have been since we fixed our lecture. I have tried and medicated, etc., in hope to be well for the 10th inst. Perhaps I may fail. Come and let me talk it over. It will be a great disappointment to me if I can't get up in time. Yours, S. S. Cox.

Four evenings later, at 8:30 p. m., the very time he should have been before the club, he breathed his last. The immediate cause of his death was peritonitis. His wife, who survives him, was Miss Beecher, of Muskingum, O., an heiress and a very intellectual woman.

After serving with sufficient distinction to come out of the war a major, in the spring of 1807 he was elected city attorney of Kansas City, and four years later was chosen mayor of that place, and presidential elector on the Grant ticket in 1872. Seven years ago he was appointed state attorney for the western district of Missouri. Maj. Warner went to the Forty-minth congress from Missouri as a Republican. He was re-elected. In the fall of 1888 he was elected commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic.

What You May Call a Prace by When You Do Not Want to Call It by Its Name. Teachers of geography who wish to vary the work will find an exercise off the track by taking these names of cities, letting the children locate them, and telling som interesting facts in connection with each. At the same time give the nickname. Children should know these thoroughly. When they come, in their reading, to the "City of Rocks" they will know it means Nashville. Fish Culture Under Difficulties. On arriving in India I at once turned my attertion to the fish of the country and their culture and propagation. My delight on first coming to these hills was unbounded, as I saw in the numerous streams a practically unlimited opportunity for following my favorite study, and I resolved to populate every river on the Neilgherries with mahseer. At some expense I obtained from Bombay a box of young mahseer, a considerable number of which survived the journey to Metapolium, where I met the box myself. I was delighted to see a number of strong, healthy fry swim-ming about, and I looked forward to having in a few hours successfully introduced the In-dian salmon into the Neilgherry waters. Elated with the fortunate result of my enterprise, I mounted my tat and rode gayly up up the ghaut, dreaming of thanks from his excellency the governor in council, and possibly the distinction of C. S. I. in recognition of my public service.

I was agreeably surprised when the gang of coolles, bearing the box, came chanting into Coonoor fully an hour before the time I had reckoned they could possibly bring such a load up the ghaut. Of course they wagged their heads and patted their stom-achs after the manner of all coolies, chattering all the waste with ape like vivacity the words "sareium" and "eenam," a present, recurring with marvelous frequency. Pleased with the quick journey they had made up the ghaut, I parted with five rupees as a present, and as they disappeared into the bazar I hastened to inspect my box. Hor-ror! every fish was dead, floating belly uppermost on the water. For some time matter remained a mystery to me. All I knew was that my money was thrown away, and the remainder of my stay on the hills was too short to admit of the experiment being repeated, even if I had had the heart to make it. Of course the coolies protested their ignorance of any reason for the disaster, and I had perforce to accept their state-

The truth I learned afterward from a friend in the postoffice. A tappal runner bringing up the mails overtock my coolies and saw them deliberately pour every drop of water out of the box through the zinc ventilators, the lid being locked, of course. On reaching the head of the ghaut the wretches had rafilled the box from the stream just below the Coencor bridge and then jogged jauntily in with their burden; and for carrying an empty case up the hill they received full pay and a handsome present instead of the kicking they richly deserved.-Biackwood's Magazine, Wasted Skill.

For eleven years a Biddeford man has been at work with his jack knife, making a mu seum of wooden curiosities. He has done nothing else, although his juck knifery has brought him no money except the small pro ceeds of two exhibitions. He has made mals, tools, a violin case composed of 2,987 pieces of wood of 166 different kinds, a yoke of oxen and a cart put together in a glass jar with a small neck, etc., etc. Many of his carvings are ornamental and others would find ready sale as toys, but he will not set a price upon anything or part with any article, and his collection is consequently increasing all the time. It is a queer instance of folly.

If the old man had properly applied his time, be might have done much good; but as it is, the only legacy that he will leave his fellow men is an example of what might be called misdirected neslessness.—Leviton Journal.
